

Kyle Moore's contribution to Watching America has been nothing less than extraordinary.

As a volunteer organization, we have had great difficulty finding someone with the necessary skills to build our new website and then install it over a very large, old database without insisting on payment that we could not afford.

Our Wordpress site is highly customized at both the back and front ends. Although our designer produced an excellent new site with a great new look and functionality, making her design fully functional, fully connected to the old database, was a very complex task, and we needed to find someone with a serious skill set to complete it.

Kyle was the only person to come forward to take on this large task within our budget. Working with him has been an extraordinarily favorable experience. His programming skills were more than adequate to the considerable task at hand, but even more importantly, whenever Kyle said he would do something, he invariably completed it exactly as he said it would be done and before the always short deadline that he would set himself.

Kyle was always very communicative, competent, efficient, flexible, and highly responsive. Despite my lack of experience with the kind of work he was doing, he never made me feel like I was bothering him when I had a question, changed my mind about something or responded in some unexpected way to any of his work.

On top of all of this, he would often find opportunities to improve our site, build them to allow me to see them, and then implement, change or remove them, according to my preference. In short, Kyle made what could have been a nightmare of a project into a smooth one. I never worried that any problem would arise that he could not solve not was I ever concerned about having him communicate with any of my non-technical team.

After Kyle had installed the new site, with zero down-time, he solved all problems and answered all questions that arose, always communicating with friendliness and clarity. At no time were any of Watching America's volunteers left hanging or frustrated at an unsolved problem.

In this one project, Kyle made himself one of the most important people at www.WatchingAmerica.com.

I would recommend him without reservation to anyone, and I hope that our relationship with him continues.

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read "Robin Koerner". The signature is fluid and cursive, with a long horizontal stroke extending to the right.

Robin Koerner, Publisher & Founder.

